NEIL HOLLAND APPOINTED VICE PRESIDENT CORPORATE SERVICES FOR CROSSLANDS RESOURCES

Crosslands Resources Ltd (Crosslands) is pleased to announce the appointment of Neil Holland to the position of Vice President Corporate Services.

Mr Holland will be responsible for several different portfolios including Safety, Indigenous Affairs, Environment, Community and Human Resources.

He brings more than 30 years' professional experience to Crosslands, which owns and operates the Jack Hills iron ore project 380 kilometres north-east of Geraldton, in Western Australia's mid-west region.

Mr Holland was most recently Senior Manager - Human Resources with Newmont Asia Pacific, a position he held for seven years. In this role, he established and oversaw Industrial Relations and Human Resources management plans in support of the development and construction of a project targeted to be Australia's largest gold mining operation, the $3bn Boddington project, in Western Australia's south-west region.

His previous professional experience includes more than eight years as Employee Relations Manager with Normandy Mining and a similar role with Western Mining Corporation, where he also held positions in Industrial Relations management.

Crosslands Chief Executive Officer Stuart Hall said the company was pleased to welcome Mr Holland at a crucial stage in Crosslands' development.

"Neil is an experienced and expert HR practitioner and manager. Crosslands is fortunate to have secured his services as we advance our feasibility work towards a significant expansion of our Jack Hills mining and export business," said Mr Hall.

"His local and international experience with large scale mining projects will supplement that of our existing management team."

"We particularly welcome his pragmatic and committed leadership at a time when attention to safety, environmental and community matters is vital for our successful transition to large scale mining."
